

Describe a member of your family that you get on well with.

You should say:

- Who is that person?
- What relationship do you have with him/her?
- What does he/she look like?
- And explain why you get on well with them.

I would like to tell you about a member of my family that I get on with very well. It is my older brother. He is a 24-year-old student who is living and studying at a university in Berlin, Germany. He has studied in Berlin for more than 5 years and we have not met each other for quite a long time.

My brother, whose name is Nguyen Mai Son, does not have a very attractive physical appearance. He is pretty tall, has brown skin, dark eyes and hair. He is a very active person and regularly organises and takes part in extra-curricular activities. He is now the president of the Association of Vietnamese Students in Berlin – Potsdam. Many people see him as a bridge that connects Vietnamese students learning overseas and our country.

My brother is a sociable, friendly and patient person. He likes to help other people, is deterministic and always takes efforts to achieve his dreams. When we were in Vietnam, we took part in a number of sports activities, especially football matches because we are both big fans of football. In addition to this. When I visited Berlin in the past, he took me to a number of famous tourist attractions in the capital of Germany and his friends there as well.

I get on well with my older brother not only because he is the only biological brother that I have, but also because he inspires me so much through his academic and social achievements. When he has free time, he usually chats with me via the Internet and gives me a lot of study support and life advice.
